COMMUNICATIONS

COMMUNITIES ARE ALWAYS SPEAKING TO US...ARE WE LISTENING?

Communities Are Always Speaking to Us ... Are We Listening? (2025) magnifies the lived experiences of the residents of the City of East Point, Georgia, unveiling barriers to health and cries for governmental support, while highlighting the feelings of joy and social connectedness within the community. East Point has a long history of structural racism, resulting in pervasive health inequities, with high rates of chronic conditions like diabetes and hypertension. This exhibition highlights historical challenges, reflects nuanced realities, and emphasizes community resilience. Each photo evokes strong emotions, including happiness, frustration, and hope. Key themes emerged, including the desire for improved walkability and greenspace and better access to healthy foods, affordable housing, and healthcare.

The collection is a product of Photovoice, a culturally grounded research method wherein photographs taken by participants are used to explore and address community needs, stimulate individual empowerment, and create a critical dialogue to advocate for community change. The photovoice project was conducted via a collaboration between East Point photographer, Chanda Scott, MLP Communications, the East Point Health Equity Community Advisory Board, and Morehouse School of Medicine and was part of a larger project, Advancing Health Equity through Policy in the City of East Point, Georgia, funded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Minority Health.
